What Intemperance will do for a Man.
 An affecting scene took place before the Criminal Court, in Washington City. We find the following account of it in the Union and States:

The Court sentenced Harry Turner, convicted, about a month since, of feloniously taking possession of a one-hundred-dollar Virginia bank-note from one Crozier, a citizen of New York, to eighteen months in the penitentiary, to take effect on the Monday first after the rising of the Circuit Court at their next term, counsel ? the prisoner having taken some exceptions to some of the rulings of Judge Crawford, and carried them to the higher court. The prisoner, immediately before receiving sentence, obtained permission to address the Court, which he did in the following words, and in a manner that moistened the eyes of most who heard him. He said:

"May it please your honor, I wish to say a few plain words to the Court before sentence is pronounced upon me. I am an uneducated man, and what I have to say must be said simply. When I was brought into this Court on a charge of having robbed a man, I came unprepared with witnesses, weak in health, broken down, I am sorry to say, by intemperance, and almost entirely unconscious of the terrible position in which I was placed. Under the circumstances, I was incapable of pointing out to my counsel any line of defense. I can not, therefore, blame the jury for their verdict. They were obliged to find me guilty on the evidence when I had no defense to offer; but facts have come to light since, and my counsel are provided with abundant affidavits to prove my innocence. They think that if the statements of those affidavits could have been presented to the jury in the form of evidence, there would have been no doubt whatever of an acquittal.

"I submit to your honor that it is but just to you and me that I should have a new trial, for I am innocent of this charge. It would be hard to make any acquaintance of mine believe that Harry Turner is a thief. My means have always been at the disposal of charity: my heart, hand, and pocket have always been at the call of suffering; and, although not a religious man in profession, I have tried always to obey that best command of my God and of your God—do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you." I have sinned against myself more than against others, and it is because I am innocent that I have strength to bear up under this difficulty. I am past the prime of life; I have a wife and children. They are not disgraced, because their husband and father has been convicted innocently. No matter what the immediate result of this matter may be, I trust in God that it will have the effect of making me in the future a wiser and a better man. I thank your honor for having indulged me thus far."

The Judge, on hearing these remarks of the prisoner, acknowledged that they had induced him to shorten the period of the sentence at first intended; namely, to eighteen months, as above.

LOCAL ITEMS.
 A NUISANCE.—The worst nuisance that has ever been suffered to exist in the town or its suburbs, is called the "Tan House drain," or the Ditch from the south end of Fairfax street to Hunting Creek. Into this Ditch or Drain not only the refuse from the Tannery, but the filth from the gutters of a large portion of the town, are emptied, intended to be conveyed into the creek. But the mouth of the Ditch is generally stopped up, and the filth and the refuse of several acres of marsh, and presents such a surface to the air as to be a nuisance.

It requires no Committees to examine this, and no reports from the Board of Health to show all this. Every body's eyes, and every body's nose, make report to the health, and deteriorate the value of property, at least in the First Ward, is manifest. It should be abated and that at once—and it is thought the mouth of the Ditch could be kept clear, by the expenditure of but a small sum. This matter should have been attended to long since.

A Fable.
 Two neighbors, whose names were Self and Will, attempted to cross a stream from opposite sides, upon a foot bridge so narrow as to allow of but a single footman at the same time. They met about midway of the stream, where each insisted that the other must turn back and give the right of the way. Each claimed to be the first on the bridge, and maintained his ground as a prior right. Each contended for this right as a matter of principle, which would allow of no concession. Each pleaded urgent and important business. Will felt himself morally bound to maintain his rights. Self could not in conscience make concession without sacrificing his honest convictions. Argument resulted in angry words, and from hard words they soon came to blows, and in the struggle to maintain each his own rights, both fell together in the stream. Each with much difficulty gained the shore, exhausted and shivering from a cold bath. Each consoled himself with the idea of "personal suffering for righteousness' sake;" and both became bitter enemies for life.

While they were muttering revenge upon each other, two other neighbors, named Love and Kindness, met in like circumstances upon the same bridge. It was a meeting of glad surprise. They exchanged cheerful and happy greetings, and each insisted on yielding the right of way to his brother. Each desired to be the first in the concession; and to carry out each other's principles, both twice crossed the bridge together. After a friendly chat, they parted company, finding in their experience a practical reason for the injunction, "Let each esteem the other better than himself."

"WORDS ARE THINGS."—Yes, and sometimes very dangerous things, too. They are like fire arms, and should be handled very carefully. Have a care of your words, or you may hurt somebody, when you do not mean to. A man's "grub" may depend upon his neighbor's grammar, and accusations of horrible sins may grow out of nothing but syntax. A worthy clergyman once came near losing his "living" in this way—and a man's living is the next thing to his life. It happened thus: The minister's name was mentioned in terms of eulogy one evening, at a social gathering in his parish, when a person present, a solemn-faced, wagish fellow, of convivial habits, observed that he quite agreed with the rest in their praise of Mr. A.

"We have often drank brandy and water together," said the bon-vivant, "and I consider him one of the pleasantest fellows I ever knew!"

A pretty compliment to a minister and teetotaler! The story got to the deacons, and the deacons brought him up in church. The parson was arraigned and confronted his accuser, who declared that, what he said, was strictly true, but was obviously misunderstood.

"It is a solemn fact," said the witness, "that your excellent minister and myself have drank brandy and water together—but then I drank the brandy, and he drank the water."

And that was the whole story that made so much disturbance in the parish, and had well nigh ruined the parson.—Boston Post.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.
 LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG.
 An old ballad printed in 1859, on a broadside, in black letter. No name was attached to it. There is a great deal of true poetry in it.

Love me little, love me long,
 Is the burden of my song;
 Love that is too hot and strong
 Burns soon to waste.
 Still I would not have thee cold,
 Not too backward or too bold;
 Love that lasteth till 'tis old,
 Fades not in haste.
 Love me little, love me long,
 Is the burden of my song.

If thou lovest me too much,
 It will prove as true a touch;
 Love me little, more than such,
 For I fear the end:
 I am with little well content,
 And a little from thee sent
 Is enough with me to live;
 To be steadfast friend,
 Love me little, love me long, etc.
